Hawai'i State Capitol Building

The Capitol Building was dedicated in March 15, 1969. It houses the offices for Hawai'i's Governor, Lieutenant Governor, 51 State Representatives, and 25 State Senators.

The Governor acts as Head of State, meaning he oversees state departments, grants pardons, and is the commander-in-chief of the state's armed forces.

The Lieutenant Governor

heads special projects delegated by the Governor and serves as the Secretary of State. If the Governor ever has to leave his position, the Lieutenant Governor is the person who would take his place.

Governor's Ceremonial Office (above)

Washington Place

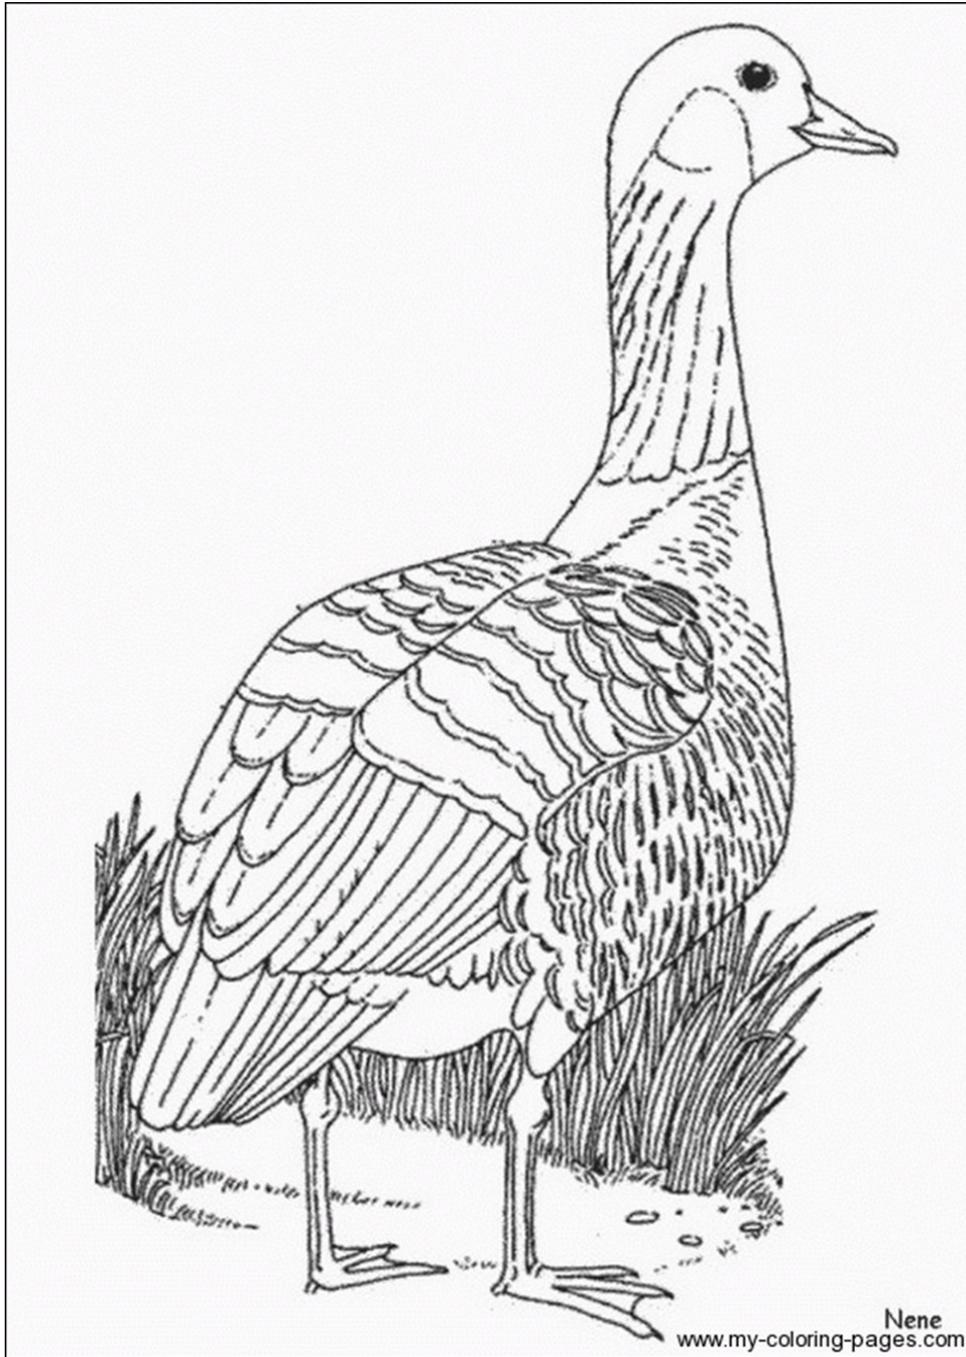

Was the home of Hawai'i's last reigning monarch, Queen Lili'uokalani. Washington place now serves as the home to the governors of Hawai'i.

Most laws in Hawai'i begin as bills. A bill begins as an idea. A bill can come from anyone – including you!

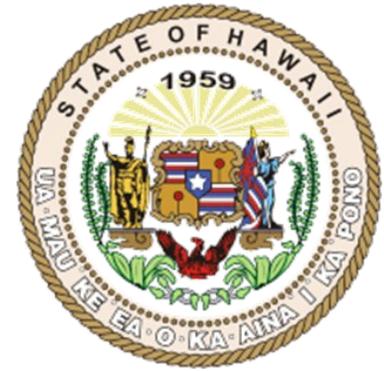

's Bill

Nēnē, The Hawaiian Goose

Hawai'i State Seal

Has the year 1959 to represent when Hawai'i became the 50th state of the United States. Features the heraldic shield with King Kamehameha I on the left and the Goddess of Liberty holding the Hawaiian flag on the right.

Across the bottom are the words “Ua mau ke ea o ka ‘āina i ka pono” which means: “The life of the land is perpetuated in righteousness”.

State Fish

The Humuhumunukunukuāpua'a, a rectangular triggerfish, means “fish with a snout like a pig”. Is brown, black, yellow, and blue and grunts like a pig if cornered.

State Flower

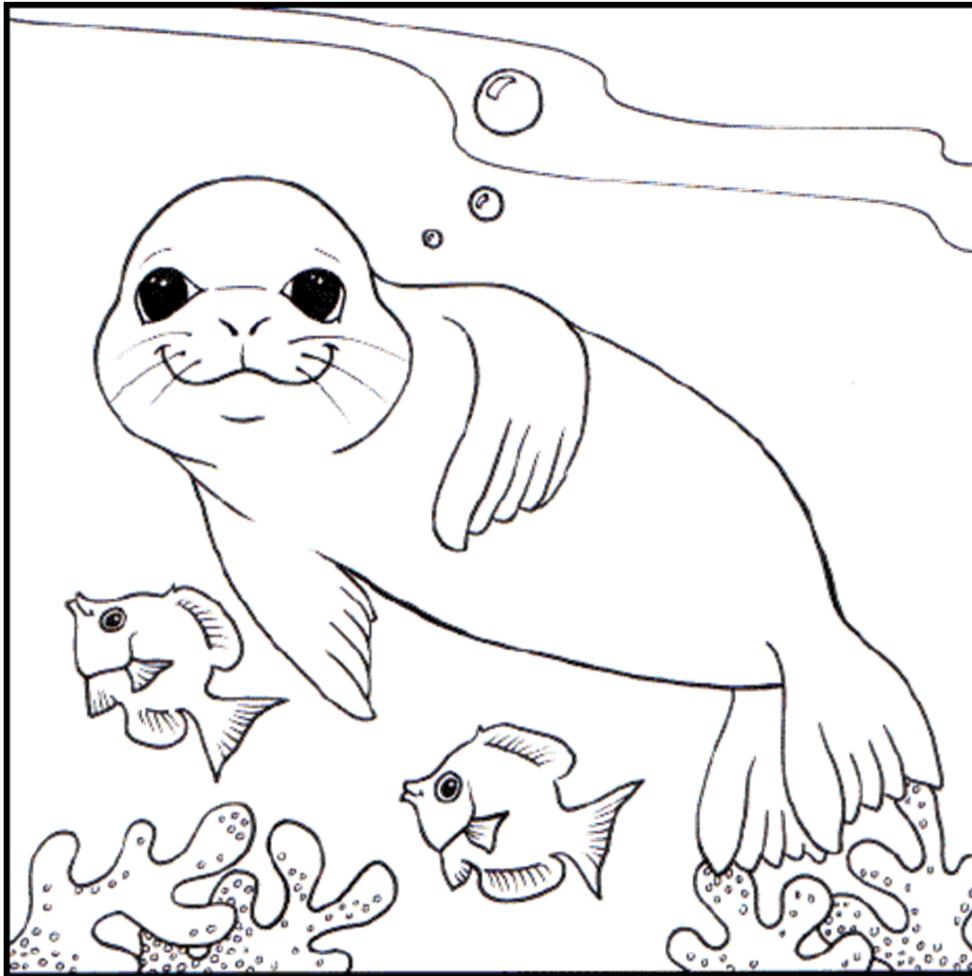

Ma’o hau hele (yellow hibiscus brackenridgei) was picked by the Hawai'i State Legislature as the state flower on June 6, 1988.

State Bird

Nēnē, or Hawaiian Goose, was named the state bird in 1957. It is currently on the Federal List of Endangered Species.

State Mammal

Hawaiian Monk Seal

Officially recognized as Hawai'i's state mammal in 2008. Monk seals are also on the Federal List of Endangered Species.
